

The problem with birth centers is that there aren't enough to go around. The 200 or so in North America cannot possibly cover the need. However, in the past, before midwives were legal again, the more adventuresome would fly to an area with a birth center, and take a vacation until their baby came. Some doctors who had a very alternative type of practice also would have similar stories to share of couples flying down from other states to birth with them.